

Dancing When the Lights Go Out

ROGER GREENE

- "Dancing When the Lights Go Out" by Roger Greene is an emotional and profound exploration of grief, loss, and the societal taboo surrounding these experiences.

When Roger's wife passed away from a rare form of dementia during the height of the 2020 COVID-19 pandemic, his world shattered. Grief consumed him, leaving him emotionally

- wrecked and questioning the cultural norms that surround loss. Through his journey, he unveils the stark reality that our society shies away from discussing grief and loss, leaving many ill-prepared to cope with the profound impact of such experiences.

"Dancing When the Lights Go Out" is a call to action, urging society to embrace conversations about grief and loss, to foster empathy, understanding, and genuine support. It's a beacon of hope, aiming to transform our approach to grief and, ultimately, to enable a more compassionate and meaningful existence in a world often shrouded in pain.

AUTHOR BIO

Roger Greene is a Doctor of Philosophy with a career history as a Chief Executive in the NHS for 12 years and Director of consulting company Tricordant for 15 years. He coaches, teaches and trains people in behaviour change. Roger leads the Bereavement Journey courses with Kingdom Faith Church in Horsham, and a network of Christians in business and the workplace in the south-east of England.

ISBN: 9781915046833

May 2024

Category: RELIGION / Christian Living / Death, Grief, Bereavement

Paperback, 216mm x 140mm

160 pages, £10.99

malcolm down
PUBLISHING