- Using fictional but relatable text-messaging conversations, André is able to communicate deep truths about the cross and resurrection. By capturing the way young adults interact daily on their smartphones, he draws the reader into the characters' messages as they explore how God could be the answer to the questions they face.

- These questions resonate with the ones many people are asking nowadays, which are often to do with our deep struggles around relationships: 'Am I loved?', 'Do I mean something to someone?', 'Does my life matter?'

- We struggle with loneliness, removing the (social media) mask and letting people see the real us. We worry that when we hit rock bottom, will anyone stick by us and love us through it all? Who can we really count on? Who can like me when I don't even like myself?

- André believes we can find answers to these questions in the life, death and resurrection of Jesus. The Bible reveals the cross itself directly answers these questions, and brings the deep connection and relationships we crave. André shows how the theme of connection is often forgotten, but can enrich other amazing truths we know about the cross so whether we're Christians or not, we can make room for God and his beautiful gospel in our struggles and every area of our messy lives.

ENDORSEMENTS

'André hasn't just learned theology, he lives it. This is evident in this book which doesn't just communicate ideas, but communicates his heart and passion to connect us with Jesus, in a way that can characterise our day-to-day living.'

Ian Henderson, Founder and CEO of Visible Ministries and the Naked Truth Project

'This book is a clear exploration of such an important topic, the cross. With sharp theology and clear examples, I can't more highly recommend this book.'
