Failing Intelligently

CARIS GRIMES

- Does failure, or feelings of failure, affect you to the point where you find it hard to move on? Do you avoid situations where you might fail or find it difficult to confront failure?

- Caris Grimes takes a frank, no-nonsense look at different aspects of failure and what we can learn from them. Using examples from the apparent failures within the ministry of Jesus, and other Biblical stories together with academic research, Caris helps us to understand how God uses failure and what we can learn from failure in our personal lives and workplaces.

AUTHOR BIO

Caris Grimes is a Consultant General and Colorectal Surgeon in Kent and lead for Patient Safety in General Surgery. As part of this role, she is involved in the investigation of serious incidents in surgery. Her teaching and research in Global Surgery is based at Kings College London. Caris lives in Surrey. She is married to Ian Nott. She has two children and two step-children.

ENDORSEMENTS

'Although Caris is a highly skilled leader in a specialised field of medicine, she writes with humility, honesty and humour. Her voice is refreshing for a church that can be so frightened to think about its own systemic and local failures. I wholeheartedly commend this book to you. It will be a comfort and guide for anyone who has failed at any point in their life. And that will be all of us.'

Joy French, Author of Ordinary Mum, Extraordinary Mission

'Caris Grimes reminds us that we all fail the perfection test and that whatever our failures, there is always the opportunity of a new chapter and a new beginning. It's a timely and well-written book that deserves to be widely read.'

Lord David Alton

'This very readable book is essential reading for any clinician seeking to marry their faith with practice.'

Professor Clifford Hughes, past President of the International Society of Quality in Healthcare

Failing Intelligently

Facing and Learning from the Impact of Failure

CARIS GRIMES

Sarah
GRACE
PUBLISHING